Gems for Ashwatthama A very dear friend of mine Gemmae Opal Amboriansmith is gone on her sixteenth birthday. She felt the need to start this blog for herself, her friends and her community to pay tribute to the person she lost. Amboriansmith's Final Blog In 2010 I was diagnosed with a genetically inherited heart condition at 19 years old. For the next five years I endured endless tests at numerous hospitals, endless counseling with my cardiologist and endless blood pressure medication. In February of 2014 my heart attack occurred. I left my mother's home early on the morning of February 21, 2014. I was to speak at the school district's pre-kindergarten graduation at 10:00 am. However, in the middle of the night I realized I was not feeling well. I went to the bathroom and found a lump in my breast. I called 911 and was transported to the Hospital by my brother, Sean.. After having a CT scan, my doctors found a very large lump on my left breast and then sent me for a biopsy. I was lucky because, being a private practice, I was seen within an hour of the biopsy. Later that day I found out I had breast cancer on my left breast. I had an appointment the next day with the oncologist and our oncoplastic surgeon.On February 25 I had open-heart surgery and breast surgery. On February 26 I received two more TAT levels and then was ready to start chemotherapy. The chemotherapy lasted 4 months. Now I am currently in an ongoing weekly treatment until the end of March. My current oncologist is Dr. Prudie Lin, my surgery was with Dr. Anurag Kumar at Wexford Medical Center in Savannah and my follow-up was at URMC in Augusta. The care for me was amazing. The nurses were nice, caring, and kept in contact with my family about my blood test results and other things. They delivered my chemo in a timely fashion and also were very friendly and not very overbearing. My breast surgeons, Drs. Anurag Kumar and Prudie Lin were awesome and made me feel so comfortable. They, along with my dietitian, Laura, went the extra mile to make sure I was getting the best care possible. I thank all of them for the wonderful job they did for me. They treated me with so much compassion and care. My cardiologist at Wexford, Dr. Christa 3e33713323
