North Korea accused U.S. authorities of plotting against it in an interview with NBC News, raising the stakes in a deepening standoff over the country's nuclear weapons. The country's deputy ambassador to the United Nations in New York, Kim In Ryong, said U.S. authorities are plotting against North Korea to bring it down with a "brazen plot to tarnish the image of North Korea" ahead of a diplomatic summit. "Everything is going toward the exchange of dialogue and we are beginning to think that an exchange of dialogue is not possible so we are exchanging the dialogue of dialogue," he said. "I think the U.S. administration, in their role as the top authority in the U.N., is plotting against our country to tear up and tarnish the good name of North Korea," he said. In the interview, he also described the April 6 nuclear test as "a very good thing" for North Korea and said it was meant to show Washington that "we cannot be pushed around anymore". "We have been forced to suspend some of our nuclear tests, but we will continue to do so until the U.S. completely withdraws its hostile policy towards the DPRK and cancels the nuclear test, and cancels the war, including the joint military exercises," he said. The comments are the latest in a war of words between the two countries following North Korea's latest nuclear test in May and the United States' late-April launch of a missile over the Japanese island of Okinawa. North Korea has since threatened to respond with "another mighty nuclear strike", overflying the Korean peninsula. "We have drawn a line. We will sink or swim together," said the deputy envoy. "If the U.S. administrative act as the commander-in-chief, whoever draws first blood, it will be them, not us. We will be damned if we do and damned if we don't." The U.S. State Department cautioned on Friday against "implying that any state could be targeted or used as a target" when asked if the United States had "plans" to strike North Korea. Kim said on Tuesday that U.S. officials had privately called his government to tell them they did not mean for the missile fired over Japan to be targeted at North Korea, but he alleged U.S. officials were "trying
